he received $173.12, the amount of mis own balance.

Depew says he saw Hermann take one bundle of money and then the other, and put both in his pocket. Then the ex-depositor left the bank. The bank is at the southeast corner of 12th street and Third avenue, and it probably took Hermann two minutes to get to the elevated station. While he was in the bank he must have heard detectives from the East 12th street police station caution him, as they make it their business to caution every depositor who withdraws his or her money, to put in a safe place before leaving the bank. Hermann told the police that he put the money he had drawn in his lower outside overcoat pocket.

Others of money from banks all over town continued to come in to President Tooker yesterday, but he declined these offers, as he has declined all shallar ones, for the very good reason that the bank needs no assistance, for the present at least. It was learned yesterday afternoon that at a meeting of the trustees of the bank, held on Thursday evening, it was decided to make a determined effort to find out just who or what caused the run on the bank. To this end a committee of three of the trustees was appointed and this committee will conduct the nost searching investigation possible, employing such detective service as it may need.

When the facts connected with the story thermann told the police, the two don't exactly dovetail. Hermann was one of the first fifty persons admitted to the bank after it was opened yesterday morning. Charies P. Depew, one of the bank messengers, recognized him as an old depositor, remarked:

"You don't mean to say you've got scared too!"

"I'm not so much scared as mother," Hermann replied. "She's got afraid something might happen to the bank and thought it would be safer to withdraw her money. That's what brings me down here."

Depew noticed that Hermann had brought his own bankbook as well as his mother's, so the fever must have hit you too. Get right into line and you'll get what's coming to you in a hurry."

Hermann didn't have long to wait. When his turn came he handed in his own bankbook along as well as would be safer to withdraw hermann the one handed to have been said: "Well, I see you've brought your hook along as well as his mother's, so the fever must have hit you too. The ticket seller looked out of his cage and told Hermann that there was nothing the matter with the door. Everybody else had been able to get out all right, and if he'd turn the knob he'd probably be able to go as easily. A second or two after this Hermann shouted:
"I've been robbed!"

"Twelve hundred and thirty-five dollars," "My!" said the ticket seller imperturbably, "better burry up and tell the police."

Hermann hustled around to the East 126th street station. Detective Mallen happened and the two hustled back to the elevated and the two hustled back to the elevated and the two hustled back to the elevated off the train at its next stop, 126th street. When, however, he found that Hermann could give no description of the thief, had not noticed anybody following him, and couldn't remember that he had been jostled about in the waiting room. Mallen concluded that Hermann was more in need of a clairvoyant than he was of a detective, and telling him that the police would do what they could, let him go back to The Bronx.

At the police station Hermann, after saying that he had been robbed of $1,255, which belonged to his mother, pulled out another roll of bills which he said contained about $700 and said he had placed that in the same pocket with the money of which he had been robbed. Detective Mallen said yesterday afternoon that Hermann must have had to make a quick shift of some of the money in the larger roll he drew at the bank to the smaller one, and that he had not been able to explain why he had shifted a part of his mother's moves to his own roll. If Hermann was robbed of $1,235 he must have shifted $2,000 $3 from his mother's roll to his own. The police have not by any means abandoned the case.

All along the margins of their copybooks in the handwriting of these little tots are sentences of the most fifthy description, such as would shock the gins of their copybooks in the handwriting of these little tots are sentences of the most fifthy description, such as would shock the most hardened citizen. I have never seen anything to equal it in my life. Now, I don't care what a man's views on the social evil are. He may favor its maintenance or he may favor its suppression by the authorities as far as possible, but I do believe that all men will rise up in protest against a condition of things that can lead to such depravity in livile children of tender years. The point is this: Vice has not been behind closed doors, it has been flaunted through the streets. The children see and hear and they absorb, and with such environment is it any wonder that they have become depraved before they are tan age when ther children are first learning the truth. It is the overtness of it all that I shall try to praye.

SPY CAUGHT IN THE MAD WARD. Shamming Insanity to Make a "Herald"

Sensation -Arrested.

A man walked into the Hoffman House last Monday and after demanding to see the Prince of Wales, began to throw flip ears old. He was a brother of Former State | flaps in the lobby. A policeman hustled Senator Morris, of Fredonia, and leaves a wife him to the West Thirtieth street police station, and two children, one of whom is an attorney and he was sent to Bellevue Hospital as crazy. He said he was James McDonald and that he lived at the Waldorf-Astoria, which wasn't he lived at the Waidori-Astoria, which wasn't so.

Yesterday the man confessed to Dr. Wildman that he was not insane and said he had been sent by the Herald to pretend to be crazy and if possible be sent to Ward's Island, in order to collect material for a sensational story to appear in that paper, describing the manner in which patients were treated, and to prove that the doctors did not know an insane man from a sane one. When asked why he did not go ahead and finish his task he said: "tou people know I'm not crazy. That spoils the story."

Dr. Fitch went to the Yorkville police court and procured a warrant for the man's arrest. The man's name the doctor gave as Thomas J Minnock and he was charged with disorderly conduct.

"He confesses that he is shamming," said Dr. Fitch, "and says that if he doesn't get out of the place pretty quick he's afraid he will become insane for sure."

A policeman was sent to Bellevue to serve the warrant and McDonald or Minnock, was taken out of the pavilion. At the Herald office it was said that nothing was known of him and if he had made any arrangements to act as a spy in Bellevue, he must have made them with Mr. Dinwiddie, the Sunday editor. The latter is ill at home.
